STUDENT AGREEMENT & PRIVACY STATEMENT

Student Agreement

The AFMA Conduct and Ethics course is being offered as a public course. This means that there may be people from different employers within the same class and your facilitator may not work for your firm.

Also any records you create in the online system or in written assignments could be subject to subpoena in relation to court cases, or could be demanded by regulators.

As such, you must not share information about ethical situations you may face or have faced at your employer (current or previous) during the class, in the online modules or in the assessments. These matters should be reserved for discussion directly with the relevant employees at your place of work.

During the workshops you must undertake to remind other students not to share information about their current or former employment.

If other students do inadvertently divulge information about situations at their present or former workplaces you must treat any such information as strictly confidential.

It is a condition of the course that you agree to be bound by the above conditions.

I agree to be bound by the above conditions.
